Q: Inserting 2D array in GAE using jinja template I would like to insert a 2D array into my model using jinja2. My issue is that I can't seem to figure out how to access the elements of the array by their index. For example, if I were using js and say res = [1,2,3,4,5]; it would be as simple as res[1] = 5; to update the array. How can I do this in jinja2? The method I am currently using works but it is not as clean as the previous method and it is still not as simple as js. Here is what I am currently doing: {% set times=loop.index %} {% set row = times.row %} {% set col = times.col %} {% set j = 0 %} {% for key,val in tokens.items() %} {% set token_value = val[row][col] %} {{token_value|f|escape('html')}} {% set j = j +1 %} {% endfor %} A: Try this: {{ loop.index[0] }} {{ loop.index[1] }} So far, only the Droid has hit the shelves, but as the day of the official launch nears, the other devices are getting closer to stores. Recruitment of T lymphocytes by lymphocyte-monocyte aggregates in normal lymph nodes. Lymphocyte-monocyte (Ly-M) aggregates are a normal constituent of lymph nodes and are also present in inflammatory lymph nodes. The Ly-M aggregates are composed of activated T cells and monocytes (CD4+ CD14+) and are currently thought to modulate the function of these cells. To study the contribution of Ly-M aggregates to the accumulation of T lymphocytes, the amount of Ly-M aggregates in lymph nodes of a panel of strains of mice with different numbers of Ly-M aggregates and of wild-type strains was determined by immunohistochemistry for CD4, CD8, and CD14. Ly-M aggregates were detected in all strains tested. In addition to the granulomatous tissue of lymph nodes, all strains showed Ly-M aggregates within the paracortex of lymph node cortex. The amounts of Ly-M aggregates were correlated to the number of these aggregates in the lymph node cortex. The Ly-M aggregates were significantly increased in the strains with many Ly-M aggregates within the lymph node cortex. The T lymphocytes were recruited to the Ly-M aggregates and incorporated all three Ly-M markers. Ly-M aggregates are, therefore, not just simple foci of active monocytes, but are actual processes in which activated lymphocytes and monocytes interact. in 1958, and that's enough of that. 5. Boston Globe: Don't link small victories to big success on defense There's so much to admire about the Patriots and the Patriots franchise. I'm impressed by their self-possession and poise. So is most everyone else. 7. ESPN: NFL Week 9 live blog Tuesday started with NFL analyst Mike Mayock suggesting that the Patriots were looking for legitimate run support from the New York Jets. I'd listen to him again. 8. Six of one, half-dozen of the other A Red Sox fan emailed to say that I have failed to see the positive that comes when, say, a Josh Beckett starts a game and no one wins.
